Ask about free visit programs

Many colleges pay for travel and lodging for students from low-income or first-generation families (often called fly-in or diversity programs). Ask the admissions office, or search the school's 'visit' page, before you rule out a campus because of travel cost.

Questions worth asking (tick them off as you go)

- [ ] What do families at our income level typically pay per year, after grants?
- [ ] What percent of students graduate in 4 years? In 6 years?
- [ ] Are there fees beyond the bill (books, housing deposits, travel, required laptop)?
- [ ] Is financial aid renewed every year, and what GPA keeps it?
- [ ] How do first-generation or low-income students get support here?
- [ ] Are classes in my major capped or hard to get into?
- [ ] Where do graduates in my major work or study after?
- [ ] Who is my advisor in year one, and how often do we meet?
- [ ] Is there free tutoring, a writing center, mental health care?
- [ ] What did most students say they wished they knew before arriving?

What they said (answers and numbers)
